LET'S MAKE A DEAL

LOLLA PASSES? IPAD? HAWKS FANS WILL DO ANYTHING FOR FINALS TICKET

Chicago Tribune

Jessica Raye is one of those fortunate Blackhawks fans who snagged a pair of tickets to a Stanley Cup game at the United Center. She bought them Monday for $525 each through a friend of a friend who is a season ticket holder.

Now Raye plans to sell the $348 ticket she bought through the Hawks' online sale last week to recoup part of her costs. She'll also cut a few days from her summer vacation to make the plan work.

"Chicago sports fans know they have to seize the moment," said Raye, 28, of Elburn. "Yes, it's crazy, but this could be one of those once-in-a-lifetime things."

Perhaps thousands of Hawks fans, some of whom are looking to monetize their ticket investments, face similar complications while they consider the championship series, which begins Wednesday night at the United Center, where the Hawks meet the Boston Bruins. Tickets in the resale market are in high demand, and slightly fewer than 2,000—about 10 percent of United Center's capacity—were available Monday afternoon.

The prices, which will rise as the series continues, have brought out some innovative thinking in ticket acquisition.

Like Carlos Olivares' approach. To Olivares, 26, of Des Plaines, viewing the Blackhawks at the United Center trumps the latest tech gadgetry.

That's why he posted an ad on Craigslist, the grand bazaar of the Internet, offering to swap his new 64GB iPad for two tickets to Game 5.

Olivares said he paid $525 for the tablet in

SCOTT STRAZZANTE/TRIBUNE

HOW MUCH?

Prices start at nearly $290 each for standing-room-only spots and end at nearly $9,400 for a front-row seat behind and slightly to the side of a goal. Those rates include an eye-popping, slightly mysterious service charge on the National Hockey League's official resale outlet, NHL Ticket Exchange, that runs as high as $1,875 for the top-end ticket.

February—a purchase that swallowed nearly his entire tax refund—but is willing to part with it for a ticket in any section of the United Center where he can sit.

"I can always find another iPad later," said Olivares, a car repair estimator. "But I can't find cheap tickets to the Stanley Cup Finals."

Craigslist is buzzing with ads from people looking to trade everything from wedding photography service to Lollapalooza tickets for passes to Game 1 or 2.

Among those is Massachusetts-based Hawks fan Antonio Fierro, who said over the phone Monday that he missed the Stanley Cup three years ago because he was in school in South Florida and didn't have the money to travel.

A year after finishing his master's degree, the 26-year-old lives in Boston and still can't afford the ticket prices. But he is determined to attend a game at Boston's TD Garden. So Monday, he took to Craigslist and Twitter, offering his apartment in exchange for a ticket.

Given the city's hotel prices, Fierro figured that he and a traveling Hawks fan might be able to strike a mutually beneficial deal.

"I'm beyond broke," he wrote in the ad, "but I have a comfortable, cozy apartment to offer while you stay here that is a 3-minute train ride from downtown. You can have as much Ramen as you'd like at my apartment, or play as much NHL '09 as your heart desires (did I mention that I'm broke?)."

Shouldn't CTA deciders have easy CTA access?

GOING PUBLIC

Tracy Swartz» tswartz@tribune.com
» @tracyswartz

Gov. Quinn last week picked a longtime politico to sit on the CTA's board—and he doesn't live anywhere near a CTA stop.

Quinn nominated Frank Zuccarelli, a 20-year supervisor of Thornton Township in south Cook County, to replace John Bowman, who is leaving the board after nearly four years. Zuccarelli, who resides in South Holland, did not return a request for comment.

At least one of the members of the seven-member CTA board has to live outside Chicago city limits, according to state law. But every board member should have easy access to the CTA.

The CTA board meets once a month to vote on important rider matters that range from fare hikes to bus service changes.

The board often makes these decisions based on presentations by CTA officials and agency reports. Some members ride the CTA regularly and some do not, according to CTA records.

They should, though: Knowledge about the CTA should stem from more than just ridership numbers and budget information. Decision-makers should know what it feels like to stand on a crowded train or wait for a bus and have three arrive at the same time.

While the governor's office was tasked with finding an appointee who lived in the suburbs, there are plenty of places the CTA travels beyond city limits. The Purple Line goes to Evanston; the Yellow Line to Skokie; the Green and Blue Lines to Oak Park.

None of the CTA bus or rail lines goes to South Holland.

A Quinn spokesman said Zuccarelli would represent an area that is underserved by the CTA.

"[Zuccarelli] comes from an area that would be made significantly more accessible to public transportation by the proposed Red Line extension," spokesman Grant Klinzman told Going Public. "He will be a very strong advocate for a region that is quickly growing and underserved by public transportation."

The CTA long has proposed extending the Red Line to 130th Street. The agency currently is improving the southern portion of the line as a step toward this extension but the project has yet to be fully funded. The CTA referred questions about the appointment to the governor's office.

When asked by GP why Quinn chose Zuccarelli, Klinzman didn't mention whether Zuccarelli has any transit experience. He does have experience sitting on boards and panels.

Last year, he was one of a handful of political appointees who lost his full-time pay and benefits after Cook County commissioners last year voted to end these perks for members of the county Zoning Board of Appeals and Employee Appeals Board.

He's also the chairman of the South Suburban College Board of Trustees.

The appointment requires state Senate approval. If Zuccarelli is approved, he is slated to make $25,000 a year.

A weekly dispatch from a CTA station of note

This week: Polk Pink Line

There's not much to poke at the Polk station on the Near West Side. The stop has multiple Train Trackers, elevator and escalator service, weather protection and sweeping views of downtown Chicago from its platform, though the glass on some of the windows has been etched with graffiti. The station received an overhaul 30 years ago, in 1983, so it doesn't look its age, which is 117. Timeless, even.

WELCOME TO TWITTER, HILLARY!

She's here!

About two months after former President Bill Clinton was forced by Stephen Colbert to join Twitter (and a month after he finally started using it, his partner in crime has joined up. Former Secretary of State Hillary Clinton announced her arrival Monday with a tweet shouting out the "Texts from Hillary" Tumblr creators for the inspiration to get on board. And check out her epic bio: "Wife, mom, lawyer, women & kids advocate, FLOTUS, US Senator, SecState, author, dog owner, hair icon, pantsuit aficionado, glass ceiling breaker, TBD..."

In honor of the former FLOTUS' first day, we came up with a wish list for what we'd like to see from her in the coming years. Don't let us down, Hil.

LIVE TWEETS OF THOSE HGTV MARATHONS SHE PROMISED HERSELF AFTER RETIRING

Guessing she has some very staunch criticisms about the weirdos featured on "House Hunters" and "Love It or List It."

GATEWAY TO PINTEREST

It's only a matter of time before Hillary discovers the black hole that is Pinterest—before leaving the State Department, she said she looked forward to relaxing, reading, exercising and basically homemaking. Each of these things IS Pinterest. Her nostalgia pinboard is going to be newsworthy and cheeky as hell.

THINK YOUR ROOMMATE IS BAD? WAIT TILL YOU HEAR ABOUT THESE GUYS ...

By Ryan Smith | FOR REDEYE

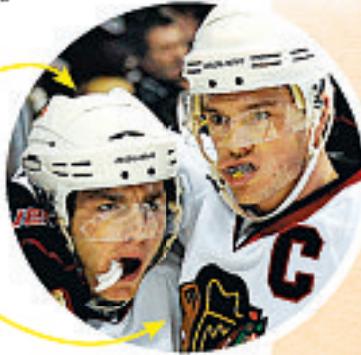

Sharing a room on the road for five years with teammate

Patrick Kane was more than enough for Jonathan Toews.

One of the provisions in the NHL's new collective bargaining allows veteran players to stay in their own hotel rooms, meaning that longtime roommates Toews and Kane officially have split for the first time since both entering the league in 2007.

Toews smirked as said he might have missed having a roommate if it was anyone but his superstar teammate, infamous for some of his off-the-ice escapades.

"I can't talk about a lot of things," the 24-year old Hawks captain said. "But one thing that got on my nerves—he never put the seat up when he went to the bathroom and pissed all over the seat, so yeah, that got old."

I HATE MY ROOMMATE

Professional athletes, college students, best friends or strangers—roommate problems almost always are inevitable no matter what the situation is, said Harlan Cohen, a relationship expert and author of the book "The Naked Roommate."

"As you live with someone, you learn what you like and don't like," Cohen said. "It's about finding a compromise, but that's hard for a lot of people."

Some compromises, of course, can be harder than others. Just ask Alex Coursen, who recently had to decide which of his two roommates in his Bucktown apartment should move out—The Alcoholic or The Angry Racist Guy—both of whom were constantly fighting.

"I felt like I was the parent of two brothers that don't get along," said Coursen, 29, a college student and musician. "I just wanted to go to work and school and not have to worry about my roommates. It kind of ruined several months of my life."

That decision became way easier when Angry Guy smacked the Alcoholic during a fight, resulting in 10 forehead stitches.

"After that it was like, 'Dude, you gotta go,'" Coursen said. "He tried apologizing and was like 'Yeah, I hit him, but I'd never punch you,' but that's pretty ridiculous."

Tabitha Boorsma's roommate ordeal was even more dramatic. After a few weeks of living in Pilsen with an Art Institute student she found on Craigslist, the roommate was tossing around a metal javelin in the living room and leaving opened condoms all over the apartment. Things got worse from there.

"One day he showed up barefoot at the door with a bunch of McDonald's bags in a box," said Boorsma, 30, now of Avondale.

"Then the police knock on the door and they grab him and take him outside and he's screaming, 'Shoot me!' at them."

“I had left a towel on the towel rack and a window open and he yelled at me for being irresponsible and said squirrels could have come in the apartment.”

locked room, where she discovered a makeshift ladder crafted from tied-up bedsheets that led to a mattress lying on the ground. She then was immediately bitten by the roommate's pet rat, which was running loose.

"The cops were just laughing, but it was definitely one of the most surreal moments of my life," she said.

Gonzalo Segares' bad roommate situation, meanwhile, lasted only one day. The Chicago Fire defenseman stayed with former teammate Rafael Robayo in a hotel one night last year after a road game in California, and quickly discovered that Robayo had a deal-breaker of a sleeping issue.

"He snored so loud that I couldn't sleep," Segares said. "So I told the guy in charge of the room, 'Look, this isn't going to work.'

So I ended up getting out of that situation pretty quickly."

Dealing with a major roommate problem right away, even if it means leaving, is the best solution, Cohen said.

"People aren't very honest and we lie to each other because we try to be nice," Cohen said. "They usually talk about the roommate problem with everyone else except that person. But a lot of times the roommate who has the problem is the problem, because they build up these things until it really pisses them off."

That's the mistake that Jen Horne admits she made in college. For two years, she shared an apartment in Chicago with a friend-turned-roommate in a situation that showed negative symptoms right away.

"I had left a towel on the towel rack and a window open and he yelled at me for being irresponsible and said squirrels could have come in the apartment," said Horne, 26, of Old Town.

In the months that followed, Horne said she often was verbally abused and made to leave the apartment whenever the roommate had a date over.

"He dated a lot of closeted guys, so he got me to go away because they didn't want to be seen," she said.

But she never initiated a confrontation over the bad behavior because she "hated conflict."

Instead, the tense relationship came to loggerheads over a $7 gas bill.

"He told me he wouldn't pay it because he didn't cook as much as I did," Horne said. "We had a huge argument over it and I packed my bags and went to my boyfriend's place."

The upside to bad roommate situations? They can be instructive learning experiences, Cohen said.

"Roommates are great, because most people eventually want to find someone to live with for the rest of their life. Having a roommate, you learn how to do that in some way."

Many of us have our own Roommate From Hell stories. But how do you avoid becoming a horror story yourself? Relationship expert Harlan Cohen, author of "The Naked Roommate," has several tips worth following for those who want to be a roommate worth living with. RS

+ You have to want to get along. The moment you stop wanting to get along is when it's over. Even if your roommate doesn't want to get along, you have to want to.

+ Your roommate is not your friend. He or she is someone you share space with. When you expect them to be a friend, and they're not, that's not fair.

+ Talk about things before they're a problem

+ Talk about problems within 24 to 48 hours, or you can't talk about it at all. Don't tweet, Facebook, Tumblr or Pinterest about how you hate your roommate, because no good can come of it.

+ Don't give keys out without checking with your roommate—it's not a hotel. If you start a new relationship, don't assume it's OK to have your boyfriend or girlfriend live with you. Check with your roommate.

+ Don't just drop hints when there is a problem. Clearly state what is wrong and then offer a solution.

+ Don't steal your roommate's food, don't wear their clothes, and don't sleep in their bed without permission

With new e-currency, social media popularity is as good as money

By JoVona Taylor | REDEYE

Popularity on social networks such as Instagram can get you more than a few "likes."

With the creation of social currency platform Popular Pays, digital-savvy Chicagoans can now leverage their volume of followers for goods and services at a variety of local businesses including Bang Bang Pie Shop, Antique Taco and Skydive Chicago.

"We believe in the power of influence and the fact that everyone is their own media channel," said Allan Holmes, co-founder of Popular Pays.

The social currency of Popular Pays involves Instagram users with 500 or more followers and local businesses looking for a new and exciting way to engage with customers and promote their brand.

Users can cash in on their social value through what Holmes calls "swaps," which are items or services offered by local businesses to influencers based on their number of followers on Instagram. Examples range from a horchata milkshake at Antique Taco for users with 500 followers or more to a skydive jump at Skydive Chicago for users with 40,000 followers or more.

After using a swap, users are encouraged—but not required—to post a photo on their Instagram page informing followers about their swap experience, which acts as word-of-mouth advertising for the businesses involved, Holmes said.

"We're bringing barter back; anyone with a phone can earn something for being good at what they do," said Holmes, 26, of Wicker Park. "A lot of people put a lot of work into their Instagram, and they should be rewarded for their work."

Currently, Popular Pays swaps can be accessed only through the company's Instagram page and website (popularpays.com) by users with 500 followers or more, but Holmes said that soon will change with the introduction of the first version of the Popular Pays app, which will launch in early July.

Holmes also said that by incorporating a Popular Pays app, the swapping process will be more organized. Eventually users will be able to earn social currency based on their interaction and influence on Instagram after using a swap, which can be used at any Popular Pays-affiliated business. The app also will allow Popular Pays to target Vine, Twitter and Tumblr to be a part of the social currency world.

Dave Miller, co-owner of Bang Bang Pie Shop, said the app will fix the only problem he noticed while helping pilot the social currency platform: Businesses have no way of tracking how many times someone has redeemed a swap.

"Overall I think [Popular Pays] is a brilliant idea," Miller said. "It is more than just marketing; we are creating potential long-term customers, and that is something that small businesses value."

Eddy Cue, Apple's senior vice president of Internet software and services, introduces iTunes Radio.

Apple unveils iTunes Radio

Apple Inc. on Monday announced its widely anticipated new streaming music service, calling it iTunes Radio.

Apple made the announcement, along with introduction of a new cylinder-shaped Mac Pro, new desktop and mobile operating systems, as well as new MacBook Air laptops and Airport base stations, at its annual developers conference in San Francisco.

The new music service is accessed through iTunes on any device and is free with ads or without ads if you pay for iTunes match.

Apple CEO Tim Cook called iOS 7 "the biggest change to iOS since the iPhone." iOS 7 got a standing ovation from developers before the iTunes Radio component was announced.

The new iOS offers updates to the desktop appearance and photo file system, as well as a new look—and sound—for Siri. Siri now will be available in a male voice. It also updates all apps on the phone automatically.

The new desktop operating system is being called Mavericks OS X, reflecting a change from its decadelong cat-themed naming convention to names reflecting landmarks in California.

One of Mavericks' primary features is Finder tabs, which allows users to open multiple system windows in tabs, just like a Web browser. The new system also allows users to use tags on files to make things easier to find. And, more features will be able to connect to multiple monitors.

An executive said the new operating system, and updates to the Safari Web browser, are focused on extending battery life and responsiveness. It will be available in the fall.

Apple announced that iBooks and Apple Maps apps were coming to the Mac, as well as an App Nap feature that saves battery life when apps aren't being used.

MEET THE MAN BEHIND KANE'S LUCKY PLAYOFF HAIRDO

By Riley Blevins | REDEYE

Patrick Kane doesn't trust his playoff hair to just anyone. You should see where the Blackhawks star's go-to guy, Carmelo Periti, sets up shop.

Walk past a row of four shoe-shining chairs raised on a wooden stage. Take a right. Front and center, a fireplace flickers.

Within an arm's reach, there's sharp-edged furniture and a red-felt pool table. Look to your left. There's a bar. Bottles of liquor glow on glass shelves. Above the bar, a large metal sign decorated with a speared olive reads "316 Club."

On top of it all, there's a wall-size chalkboard displaying NHL and NBA playoff odds. Pictures of cars and framed jerseys are everywhere. TVs sit in every corner.

It feels like Las Vegas packed into a 2,800-square-foot shop in the Loop.

But the menu here displays haircuts and spa features, not drinks and showtimes. A run-of-the-mill haircut will run you about $55.

It's not the kind of place Periti, general manager and barber at 316 Club Barber Spa, expects to see many college kids.

Then again, how often do you get the chance to have your hair cut and styled by the same guy who constructed Kane's famed playoff mullet?

For that reason, Periti, who has been cutting Kane's hair for four years, was visited by an unusual costumer.

Recently, a University of Wisconsin-Madison student drove two and a half hours to the spa.

Patrick Kane

in joking mode when he pulled up a picture of Jaromir Jagr's shoulder-length mullet from the '90s.

Kane laughed, then got his hair trimmed and styled—same old, same old.

But the next time Kane sank into Periti's chair, he did so with a grin.

"Let's do it," Periti recalls the hockey star saying.

"[Bleep]," Periti recalls thinking. He'd never done a mullet before.

He told Kane to hold on. He went and examined a few photos before he started chopping

He wasn't from Chicago. He had no plans other than to see Periti.

"He told me, 'I just wanted to get my hair cut by the same barber that Kane used once in my life,'" Periti said with a chuckle. "I told him he was a true fan."

Ever since the 36-year-old styled Kane's mullet in 2010—the year the Hawks hoisted the Stanley Cup—the attention has been coming in buckets.

And it all started with a simple joke.

Periti had been cutting Kaner's hair since training camp in 2009. The Hawks' r i g h t w i n g e r was growing his hair out by the time playoffs rolled around.

"I just told him we should do something fun with it," Periti said. "We both kinda laughed."

Periti thought the duo was still

"Yeah, I was nervous. I was sweating," Periti said. "I knew this would blow up. It was just like anything, you're always going to be nervous the first time doing something."

Forty minutes of precision snipping later and the mullet was complete. Kane was satisfied.

Cutting hair is in Periti's blood.

The die-hard Blackhawks fan—Periti refers to the team as "we" and currently sports a playoff beard much fuller than Kane's—arrived in the States from Italy when he was 6 years old.

His father has been cutting hair for 57 years and owns a barber shop in Franklin Park.

Periti earned an engineering degree from the Illinois Institute of Technology and worked at an engineering firm for five years.

"I just hated it," Periti said. "I looked back at my dad and everything he had, and I thought, 'What a great business. What am I doing?'

"One thing led to another."

Since, Periti has constructed all three of Kaner's mullets and even done one for Brandon Saad.

Periti also has been charged with the knee-shaking tasks of straight-razoring Kerry Wood's goatee and trimming Blackhawks coach Joel Quenneville's mustache and eyebrows, to name a few.

And if there's any activity that'll put hair on your playoff-bearded face, it's playing with sharp objects next to Quenneville's iconic 'stache and 'brows.

"Asking a customer to get his eyebrows and mustache trimmed is standard practice, so I asked [Quenneville]," Periti said. "At first he was like, 'Nah.' But a few seconds later he goes, 'You know what, no one's ever asked me that before. Do it. Just be careful.'

"When he said that, I wanted to tell him I was joking. I barely touched it. But really, doing all this stuff, it's all been so fun."

1	What should the Hawks get for winning the Western Conference?	An endless supply of 5-Hour Energy. After that exhaustive double OT, they'll need their strength for the Bruins.	Wyoming.	Chris Sale. The White Sox don't know what to do with him.	The victory shall grant natives all lands west of the Mississippi. That's fair, right?	Patrick Kane's bar tab wiped clean from Saturday night.
2	Let's have your best Boston Bruins trash talk.	Boston had the tea party. But Chicago is ready for the Stanley Cup party. Woohoo!	I hope former Blackhawks great Bobby Orr makes an appearance.	As a black man, I hate any state that begins with "Massa..."	The only guys named "Milan" I know drive Vespas and wear berets. Congrats.	Hey Bawwwstin, Frolik my naaaahds!
3	What does Chris Bosh mean when he says the Miami Heat have to play with "fear"?	Playing with the threat of getting booted and called a loser. It sucks, right, LeBron?	He just found out the rest of the dinosaurs went extinct.	He actually said they should play with "Fierce" ... his alter ego.	Like, "Imagine if the government had hours of phone records on you" type of fear. Oh. Wait.	They have to play like they're trapped in the closet.
4	Now that Jay Cutler and Kristin Cavallari have tied the knot the honeymoon is over soon. Cutler will get back to daddy diaper duty stat.	... they will really struggle when they have to figure out how to untie it.	... it's just me left on blackpeoplemeet.com ..(... he can focus on what's important: underachieving with his new offense.	... we can finally start the divorce countdown clock!
5	What did the Bears get Cutler and Cavallari for a wedding gift?	A trip to the happiest place on Earth, wherever that is. Then he has an excuse for frowning so much.	The red beer-can holder hat from his registry.	Miley Cyrus tickets with Amanda Bynes left to baby-sit... thank us later.	Life insurance ... for when he's buried into the Soldier Field turf in October by the rest of the NFL.	A stationary bike for when Kristin hurts Jay's feelings.

BUSTS IN THE WIND

You'd like to forget these Bears, but can't

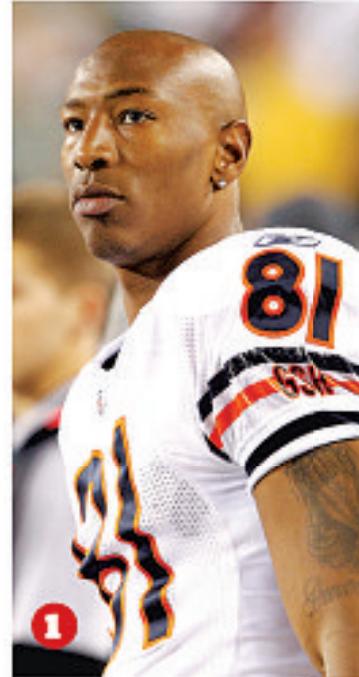

By Riley Blevins | REDEYE

If you're any kind of Bears fan, you know the franchise has a painfully long list of draft and free-agent woes.

The latest is Gabe Carimi. The Bears traded the former first-round pick to Tampa Bay for a sixth-round pick in the 2014 draft. With his departure, the Bears are without any first-round picks selected by former general manager Jerry Angelo, who ran drafts from 2002-11.

Carimi arrived in Chicago as a highly regarded tackle out of Wisconsin. If you caught just a second of last season's game against San Francisco, you figured his days as a Bear were numbered.

So, in "honor" of Carimi, RedEye picks its biggest Bears busts in recent memory. RMATSON@TRIBUNE.COM | @RILEY_BLEVINS

1 Sam Hurd
wide receiver

Hurd's lone season with the Bears, in 2011, was quiet. But he made a big splash off the field, pleading guilty to trying to buy cocaine and marijuana to set up a drug-distribution network.

2 Marion Barber
running back

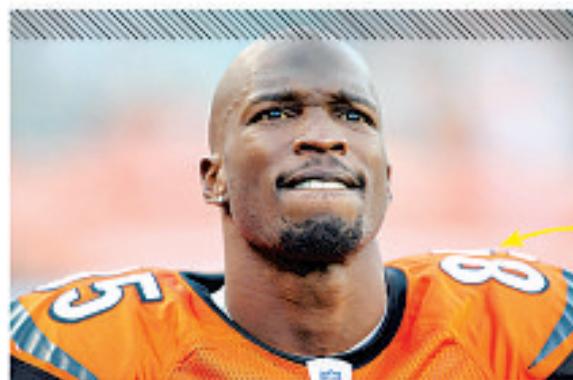

Barber saw action in 11 games in 2011 and rushed for six touchdowns. Not terrible, but, um, remember that game against the Broncos? The one where he pretty much singlehandedly gave the Denver Tebows a win? That WAS terrible.

3 Cade McNown
quarterback

Drafted by the Bears with the 12th overall pick in 1999, McNown was traded to Miami in 2001 after throwing only 16 touchdowns and 19 interceptions in two seasons. He played just 25 games in a Bears uniform.

4 Curtis Enis
running back

Enis spent his entire career with the Bears—and he rushed for a grand total of four touchdowns in three seasons after being the No. 5 overall pick in the draft.

30 THE DIGIT

That's how many days former NFL receiver

Chad Johnson will spend in a Florida jail after putting his own attorney on the butt during a court hearing in Florida.

THE FINISH LINE

► Cincinnati 6, Cubs 2 ► White Sox vs. Toronto, late

5 Bryan Cox linebacker

The Bears signed the former three-time Pro Bowler to a four-year, $13.2 million deal in 1996 that made him the highest-paid Bear in history at the time. Cox went on to spend just two bland seasons in Chicago.

Chris Williams offensive line

Williams was the 14th pick in 2008 after the big fella allowed just one sack in 12 games at Vanderbilt. He was released in October 2012 after being overwhelmed by, well, almost any NFL pass rusher.

6 David Terrell wide receiver

After a stellar career at Michigan, which included two All-Big Ten selections, the Bears picked Terrell with the eighth overall pick in 2001. He spent four seasons in Chicago and caught just nine touchdowns.

Michael Haynes wide receiver

Haynes was the Bears' top pick in 2003. He played three seasons in Chicago, never registering more than two sacks in any of them.

'The Daily Show'
is about to get a lot more, well, British

Los Angeles Times

Somewhere in South London, there's a storage unit that's a veritable time capsule of John Oliver's life, circa 2006. That's when, as a young comedian on the rise in the U.K., he got a call from "The Daily Show."

He landed in New York on a Sunday and made his debut as the show's "Senior British Correspondent" the very next day. Assuming he'd be fired within a month, he had signed only a four-week lease.

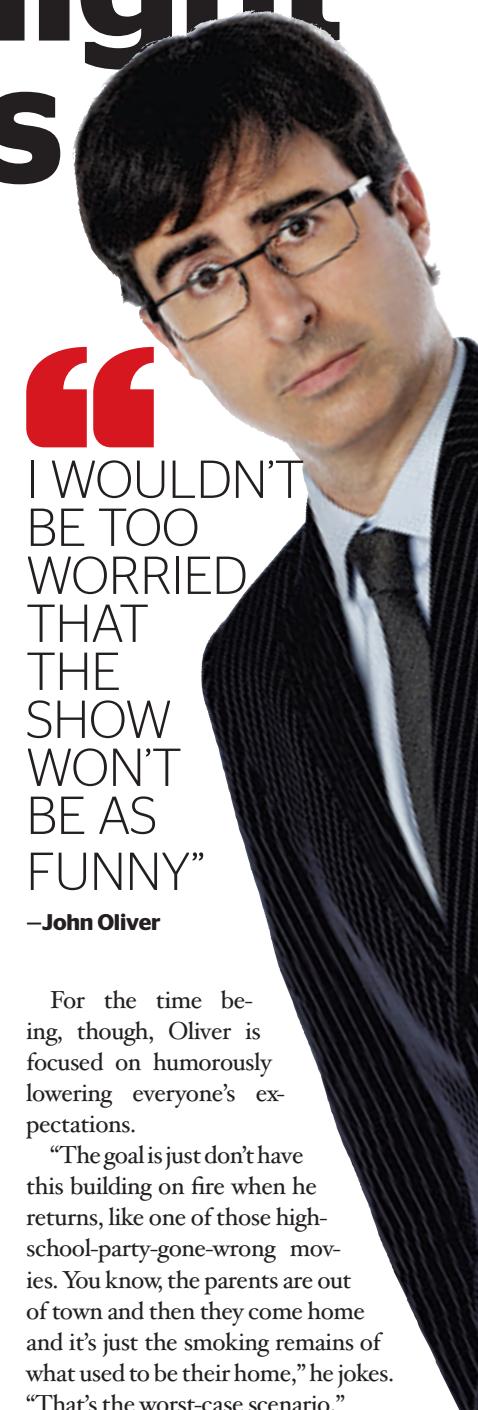

Seven years later, if there's anyone at "The Daily Show" who ought to feel secure in his job, it's Oliver: On Monday, the Cambridge-educated comedian began a summerlong stint as host after Jon Stewart took a leave of absence to direct his first feature film, "Rosewater."

But Oliver, 36, is not quite willing to believe that he's made it. "For there to have been some kind of administrative error makes more sense to me than that this has actually happened," he says on a sweltering afternoon in late May. While everyone else on "The Daily Show" staff is enjoying a week of hiatus, Oliver is toiling away in his office, a small space dominated by a framed Liverpool F.C. jersey.

Given the intimidating task of steering "The Daily Show" in Stewart's absence, it's not hard to understand why Oliver is putting in overtime. Since Stewart came on board in 1999, "The Daily Show" has become a cultural touchstone.

With an average of 2.5 million viewers a night, it's the top-rated late-night show among viewers under 50 and has racked up 10 straight Emmys for variety series. Stewart's high-profile interviews and blistering critiques of targets like Fox News have earned him a reputation as a latter-day Edward R. Murrow—the kind of personality who can draw 200,000 people to a rally on the National Mall.

Put another way, Oliver has some pretty big shoes to fill. Nevertheless, he agreed without hesitation to fill in for Stewart because, he says, "I'd do anything for him. I'll paint his house if he wants."

I WOULDN'T BE TOO
FUNNY"

—John Oliver

For the time being, though, Oliver is focused on humorously lowering everyone's expectations.

"The goal is just don't have this building on fire when he returns, like one of those high-school-party-gone-wrong movies. You know, the parents are out of town and then they come home and it's just the smoking remains of what used to be their home," he jokes. "That's the worst-case scenario."

Despite all the self-effacement, Oliver was "the obvious choice" to fill in for Stewart, according to executive producer Rory Albanese. Citing Oliver's strengths as a writer, producer and on-camera performer, he predicts a relatively seamless transition. "I wouldn't be too worried that the show won't be as funny," he says. "It's just going to be in proper English."

"I have a good working knowledge of America's greatest wack jobs," Oliver boasts, adding that the most difficult challenge in the weeks ahead will be treating guests "like human beings."

WIGGING OUT

DECREEED
FROM NORMAL HAIR

By Dana Moran | REDEYE

America, you have been warned: "Officially decided that June is crazy hair month. If there's something you have been wanting to do—go for it! No Fear! Crazy hair is fun." This tweet courtesy of Pink, who was spotted recently with shaved sides on her long blond hair. The singer hasn't exactly been shy about going for wild 'dos in the past—she does, after all, like to match her hair to her name. We took the liberty of choosing some other celebs who should swap coifs.

Ohhhhh no.

Kerry Washington
(Ginnifer's hair)
She COULD pull it off, but let's keep it long, Kerry.

Janelle Monae
(Taylor's hair)

Yikes. In this case, blondes don't have more fun.

Taylor Swift
(Kerry's hair)

We've already seen dark hair on Evil Taylor in the "You Belong With Me" video—and we kind of dig it.
